Welcome to the latest edition of Living Ratings

In this latest Living Ratings study of the brand and digital intelligence of the world's leading 100 law firms, we report on an active year, with refreshed websites, enhanced content and more focused digital strategy. Yet there's a 'but'. The last Ratings survey in 2017 uncovered a sector-wide raising of the bar in design, functionality and content. This time, there's a perceptible slowing in the pace of innovation as the majority play catch-up. Now we're waiting for the next leap forward.

What's the issue?

Nothing stands still in digital. So we've upped the ante in our scoring and methodology, celebrating excellence – and being clear where the gaps (and opportunities) lie. Just 13 of the firms we surveyed make it into the top quartile, representing 'Determined' digital communications. This is down from 2017, so there's room for improvement. The very best firms have recognised the value of issue-based marketing, with messaging not around 'sectors' or 'competencies' but real world business challenges. This is a step in the right direction towards outward-facing communications.

Yet it's in social that the sector lets itself down. While use of social is on the rise – with Instagram the fastest-growing channel for law firms – many still fail to grasp its full potential to provide meaningful, targeted content in dedicated channels.

Now with added brand

In this survey, we also assess brand effectiveness online... and the news is not altogether encouraging. Few legal firms understand how to amplify their brands beyond the homepage – a logo is not a brand, after all. And fewer than 20% state their brand purpose upfront. Weighing in at a mere 50 to 60 words, adding a value proposition statement that answers the who, what and why questions, is a quick win.

In content, we note a steady improvement in quality – as well as in its volume. And here's a caveat. As quantity increases, there's a role for better search and enhanced curation, to ensure that the most relevant, recent and motivating content is surfaced more visibly.

Two cheers for the lawyers

It shouldn't come as a surprise that we give the sector 'two cheers' this time around. It sets out to achieve a lot with more limited marketing resources – compared, say, to investment banking or accountancy. But in brand, social and content curation, there's much still to do, even as firms grow in digital maturity. Think 'purpose' and 'mission'. Some should stop, take stock and ask themselves the most basic question of all: "what (and who) is our digital presence actually for?"

About Ratings

Now in its 21st edition, Living Ratings benchmark the brand and digital effectiveness of the world's leading professional and financial services brands.

The studies provide our clients with evidence-based insight that continuously enhances their marketing communications and gives us unparalleled knowledge of our specialist sectors.

Recent studies include:

Bespoke digital diagnostics for your law firm

In addition to our annual ratings report, we also offer an in-depth diagnostic of your website and social media footprint, analysing your digital intelligence and comparing your firm against your closest competitors.

The objective of the diagnostic is:

1. To analyse how your site is performing now against a set of proven benchmarks
2. To enable you to implement enhancements and fixes in line with best practice
3. To re-align your digital strategy and ensure that any future generated content receives the maximum exposure with your target audience
4. To improve the user experience and information architecture of your website
5. To connect your social media strategy with your website
6. To ensure that your content management system is fit for purpose
7. To understand what is required for you to gain a higher Ratings score and create a better digital experience for your external and internal target audiences.

Our analysis is the logical first step on the journey to improving your brand and digital intelligence, providing you with the objective evidence and a clear strategy.

Who, what, when and how we rated

And what's changed since our last ratings

Who we rated

In January and February 2018 our analysts reviewed the top 100 leading global law firms according to Legal Week, published in September 2017. Each firm was rated against 50 criteria covering engagement (useful functionality) and evidence (substantive content) across four key categories.

What we rated

We examined each law firm's publicly available digital footprint. We didn't access any private or subscription channels.

How we calculate our scores

Each company is allocated an overall percentage score. This is calculated by adding the scores for 50 individually weighted engagement and evidence criteria. We then use the separate engagement and evidence scores to tag each law firm with one of four definitions of their digital presence – Determined, Energetic, Focused or Lacklustre.

Sector averages are based on the full listing of 100 firms. The five firms with the highest scores are also reviewed with expanded case studies.

Raising the bar. The 2018 criteria

As Living Ratings develop and become more in-depth, our scoring methodology is changing too. The 2018 Law Firm Ratings features a detailed analysis of:

Engagement

Search quality

We want it all and we want it now. Law firms should have quick intuitive search engines that serve up filtered results by practice area, industry, case study or people.

Multi-lingual

Creating an up-to-date and fully multilingual digital experience is not easy. So the firms that do it, and do it well, are rewarded in our Ratings.

SEO

Never has search engine optimisation (SEO) been so important – it can be the difference between prospective clients finding you – or not! We apply third-party SEO software to scan every website and assess whether best practice has been adopted.

Security

The security of your website is important and with the increase of client log-in areas, a well-coded site and an SSL certificate is a must-have.

Channels

Firms adopting best-practice, using a range of active social media channels and promoting content that is proprietary, can expect high scores. We also look positively on how firms are using the channels for their different audience types, e.g., the use of Instagram for CSR related content.

Evidence

Digital branding

Recognition is given to those firms that have a clear and consistent digital brand and use it to help their readers consume data.

Intellectual capital

When clients engage law firms, it's really "people choosing people." And in a fiercely competitive industry, law firms that spotlight their intellectual capital through engaging team profile pages are clearly showcasing their point of difference.

Moving image

Those firms using film or animation to help in their corporate storytelling, receive recognition for doing so. This media must be used carefully, not be too long and above all, have a clear purpose to support the business.

Keeping it short

We've said it before, but what you leave out matters. Your target audiences are increasingly time poor, so we applaud those firms who keep it short and to-the-point.

Content strategy

Taking into account all the above and a further 20 criteria, we can see which firms have a clear and well-managed content strategy and those that don't.

Are you determined, focused, energetic or lacklustre?

By analysing the individual engagement and evidence scores, we have categorised each of the leading firms' digital intelligence into four areas.

Engagement and evidence: the leaders

Determined digital law firms build experiences for their users

Law firms that take a determined approach to digital engagement have a relentless client focus. Their successful formula combines two key elements:

1. Engagement.

Determined digital law firms recognise the potential of useful digital functionality backed by a client-focused channel strategy.

They can then create appealing and relevant content on a variety of media, including stimulating graphics, audio, animation and video.

2. Evidence.

Determined digital law firms promote clear purpose. They offer the user informative messaging, relevant subject matter and the kind of insight that shows a deep understanding of client issues and interests.

This demonstrates the ability to help clients succeed.

The risks of lacklustre digital communication

Without strong digital brands, firms are in danger of becoming commodities, selected purely on price. After all, if one firm's lawyers have the same skills as another, why pay more?

- Baker McKenzie
- Average

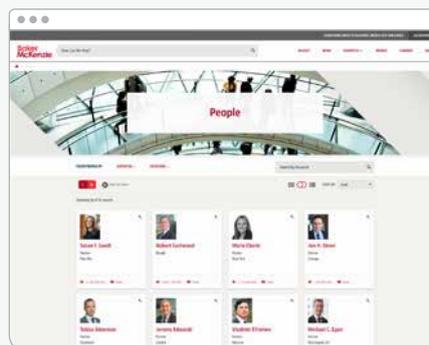

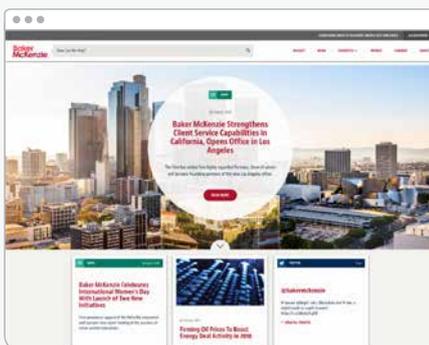

Key features

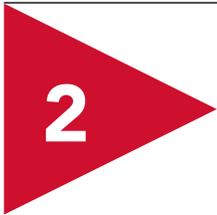

- ▶ Client-centric across all channels
- ▶ Clear content strategy
- ▶ Strong social media presence
- ▶ Excellent user experience
- ▶ Content enhanced by both brand and design

Baker McKenzie has created a well-thought-out and executed site for users. The firm's website is totally client-centric, focusing on their needs and wants, and delivering them in a showing, rather than telling manner. Content strategy enhances the user's knowledge of the firm and what is going on in the industry. Providing six microsite hubs and a 'thought leadership kit' is just scratching the surface of the vast array of knowledge provided on the site. Finding this information is made easy with Baker McKenzie's excellent user experience.

Each of the sections in the primary navigation has its own extensive search function, giving users the ability to filter and find exactly what they're looking for. Baker McKenzie kept up the good work in social media. Twitter, LinkedIn, Facebook, Instagram and YouTube are updated regularly, with the intention of serving each channel's unique audience.

Please get in touch to arrange a meeting.

The not-so-social networks

When it comes to digital effectiveness – and the plethora of channel opportunities now open to legal brands – there's one maxim to live by: 'different strokes for different folks'. In both brand communications and social channels, bold and targeted approaches pay dividends. Yet too many legal brands in our Ratings report follow the same well-trodden path, use the same design templates and take the same 'cookie cutter' approach to websites. We believe it's time for greater distinctiveness.

Talk the targeted talk

In legal circles, social media champions are few and far between. This handful of firms are succeeding because they take a connected approach to generating value-added content (that goes beyond chatter 'about us'). And they deliver their content as a campaign, spreading an insight or viewpoint over a series of posts that each link back to the .com site. Some firms even create dedicated, issue-based thought leadership channels focused on their key sectors. Want to talk to M&A or to Real Estate? Then tweet directly to the practice or industry team about what matters to them.

Demisting the shop window

As well as championing social, the leading firms in our top quartile understand the critical role played by their digital brands. As your online presence becomes your shop window, your brand (and what it stands for) is a web-enhancing property, deserving to be upfront, proud and distinctive. Yet no fewer than four top-ranked firms by revenue sit in the bottom 75% for this measure. Whether this is a result of arrogance or fear, we just don't know. Meanwhile, many firms are missing on the open goal that is online video by either ignoring it entirely or creating generic films with no clear message. It's the right media – but the wrong approach. To succeed, keep it short, keep it clear, keep it single-minded.

High fliers, steep fallers

While stellar firms like Winston & Strawn, Goodwin and Gowling WLG punch above their weight with digital communications that take advantage of new opportunities, some industry stalwarts are heading in the opposite direction.

In this report, we've seen a number of previously high-flying firms slipping down the rankings. Why? Their functionality is becoming dated, content feels old and social outreach is failing to connect with any regularity or relevance. In today's market, where merger-mania is still rife, launching a new website is merely the beginning of a journey – not the end of one.

To be 'Determined' in digital takes time, talent and ongoing investment. As the rest of the sector plays catch-up and the new leaders look to innovate, this is no time to rest on your laurels.
